HIGH-END art fair Art Basel has been hacked, and the wealthy individuals and art dealers who attend the events have been warned their personal information may have been stolen.

Art Basel's parent company, MCH Group — which operates the fancy art fair in Basel, Switzerland, as well as Miami Beach and Hong Kong, plus the watch and jewelry show Baselworld — has sent out a mailing to warn its list of high-end attendees that MCH "was hit by a criminal cyberattack using malware" and their personal details may have been stolen. The group has now filed a criminal complaint, but admits it does not yet know who the hackers are.

A message to Art Basel clients sent on Friday reads, "The information currently available to us suggests that the perpetrators may have gained access to data such as personal contact details. We do not yet know the extent of the data breach and these traces are being analyzed in cooperation with cybersecurity experts as a matter of urgency."

The message continues: "As always, we recommend that you exercise caution when dealing with unknown contacts, for instance if you are contacted by third parties by e-mail or telephone, who may represent themselves as your bank, internet provider or insurance company and use personal details to gain your trust. The MCH Group has filed a criminal complaint against the perpetrators unknown to us and is cooperating closely with the relevant authorities... MCH has been working closely with security and cybercrime specialists, including the Swiss National Cyber Security Centre, the police and external experts," says the e-mail.

This year's Miami Beach show — planned for Dec. 2 to 4 — is back in full force, with 254 galleries taking part. Galleries that regularly show at Art Basel include Gagolian, Edward Tyler Nahem, Jeffrey Deitch, Lehmann Maupin and Helly Nahmad Gallery. Attendees at the Miami Beach show include stars such as Leonardo DiCaprio, Martha Stewart, Paris Hilton, Diddy, Aby Rosen and Swizz Beatz, plus wealthy art collectors including Miami's Rubell family, Eli Broad, Ron Perelman and Leon Black.

Won't run away

KRISTIN Chenoweth is engaged to boyfriend of three years Josh Bryant. "Guess you're stuck with me now," she wrote on Instagram. "A million times yes!" Bryant, 39, reportedly popped the question at the Rainbow Room with a three-stone diamond ring. Chenoweth, 53, who's been engaged three times before, told Vogue: "I've been the runaway bride. Now that I've found him, I won't let him go. I will race to greet him at the altar." She met Bryant in 2016 at her niece's wedding, where his band performed. He then played her nephew's wedding in 2018 and they began dating.

Reality sinks in

PK Kemsley — husband of "Real Housewives of Beverly Hills" star Dorit Kemsley (above), who was reportedly held at gunpoint in a home invasion this week — says his family is trying to return "to normal." PK, who was in London at the time of the robbery, is back at their LA home, where he and his family are "all together and will get through this," he said via social media. The LAPD confirmed to Page Six that three men broke into the house, but did not confirm Dorit was held at gunpoint.

Breaking out the famous bunny costume she wears in "Legally Blonde," Reese Witherspoon has one thing to say about looking good on Halloween: What? Like it's hard?

Model behavior

"THE stuff models have to deal with, the abuse, I don't think people realize," model Coco Rocha told The Post's Nicki Gostin at the DKMS 30th anniversary gala. "It happens to all models, as much as you think the top models don't experience that." She launched a Coco Rocha Model Camp curriculum, and told us: "I discuss what your rights are as a model, as a human. What you might experience, what you should never experience, all of it. I have experienced the bad, the good and the amazing. And I want them to just experience the good and the amazing."

He's Ice'd out

ICE Cube has quit a $9 million role in the Jack Black comedy "Oh Hell No" after refusing to get vaccinated. The Hollywood Reporter first revealed that Cube exited the Sony comedy, which is also produced by Black, on Friday. The production was preparing to start shooting in Hawaii with director Kitao Sakurai, the filmmaker behind Netflix's breakout comedy "Bad Trip." The outlet added: "Producers on 'Oh Hell No' made the request that cast on the project would need to be vaccinated." The film had already pushed back its start date after Black injured himself in June while filming a gag for the last episode of Conan O'Brien's talk show. Sources told THR the studio was looking to find a replacement for Cube, who throughout the pandemic has promoted mask-wearing. In August, Bacone College in Oklahoma thanked the star and others for a donation of 2,000 masks. In April 2020, amid COVID-19 lockdowns, he unveiled T-shirts inspired by his 1992 classic "Check Yo Self," featuring the title lyric and a pic of himself in a surgical mask, with proceeds going to health care workers. Reps for Ice Cube and Sony didn't get back to us.

We hear

THAT culinary star Andrew Molen is cooking every weekend at the Hamptons' Maidstone hotel... THAT Julianna Margulies will host the New York Public Radio Gala on Nov. 16... THAT Andrew Lloyd Webber DJ'd a party for the reopening of "The Phantom of the Opera," where guests included Luan de Lesseps and Aviva Drescher... THAT Mel Brooks recorded robocalls to plug his great-nephew Todd Kaminsky as Nassau County District Attorney.

Kardashian has Kovid again

KHLOE Kardashian is battling COVID-19, again — and this time, so is her 3-year-old daughter. "Hi guys I wanted to let you know True and I tested positive for Covid," the "Keeping Up With the Kardashians" star tweeted on Friday. "I've had to cancel several commitments and I'm sorry I won't be able to make those happen." Kardashian noted that she is "luckily" vaccinated. "All will be OK," she wrote. "We will be over here in quarantine and following current guidelines." Kardashian was a pioneer in contracting — and getting access to a test for — the disease, getting it in March 2020. She documented her experience in self-recorded videos from her bedroom that aired during the final season of her familial reality show. "I suffer from migraines, but this was the craziest headache... The coughing, my chest would burn when I would cough," she recalled recently. "Let me tell you, that s--t is real," she warned. Kardashian family members including Kim, her now-estranged husband (the rapper formerly known as Kanye West) and their kids also caught the virus at various points in the pandemic.
